building an OUTDOOR OASIS

Utilizing outdoor spaces and providing employees and guests places to take a break from the indoors can go a long way in building a strong company culture and increasing employee satisfaction. The COVID-19 pandemic caused a lot of people to take notice of outdoor seating areas and come to appreciate those spaces as a workday alternative. Whether you have a small space or an expansive site, now's the perfect time to evaluate your property to determine the best way to design a fun and functional outdoor space.

THINK BEYOND the building walls

Today's workplaces are expanding beyond the four walls of an office. As technology evolves and becomes more mobile, employees are looking for new and alternative workspaces to inspire creativity and increase productivity. Many want to take their work outdoors. Businesses are seeking to take advantage of the property surrounding their offices by converting existing space into permanent outdoor workspaces. Whether you are designing an outdoor area for group meetings or a space that allows for individual work, the spaces need to maximize employee productivity by providing ample room to unwind and connect.

INSPIRED OUTSIDE

Natural light and fresh air throughout the workday can work wonders when it comes to employee well-being and personal growth.

A connection to nature can lead to healthier and more stimulating work environments, and accessibility is everything. An outdoor deck adjacent to an office space allows for fluid transitions throughout the workday. A range of seating options and simple touches like shade covering and umbrellas give employees flexibility to pick and choose the right time and the right space to connect with others or retreat for individual focused work amongst a natural space.

ENHANCING employee engagement

The more we explore the benefits of spending work hours outdoors, the more we see upsides of spending time outside. According to recent research, working outdoors can lead to increased employee happiness, enhanced employee engagement, and improved employee retention. This is attributed to the idea that humans have an innate need to connect to nature. This new insight is reflected in modern workplace design with a keen focus on biophilic elements and furniture made with natural elements.

a breath of FRESH AIR

Well-designed outdoor spaces can help reduce the impact of office distractions and lead to improved performance.

Exposure to nature has been shown to lower levels of cortisol, the human stress hormone, as well as stimulate creativity. Due to the impact on overall well-being, outdoor spaces are the next logical step in the evolution of flexible workspaces. They give employees the option of movement away from a permanent workstation to a space that revitalizes and recharges simply based on the fact that it's outdoors.
