define, divide and CONQUER

Space division is an important element in creating privacy and defining distinct work zones within your organization. Non-permanent products, like freestanding partitions, mobile screens, and desktop panels, allow you to customize and configure your floor plan for optimal functionality. In addition to eliminating visual distraction, many space division products are also built with acoustic properties that further reduce distractions throughout the workday. As an added benefit, these elements incorporate layers of interest through color, texture, and pattern.

AN OUTSTANDING stand-alone space

When major architectural renovations are out of the question, you can still find ways to maximize your space and create new collaborative areas using freestanding structures that are easy to specify and install. There are stand-alone or fully enclosed room-within-a-room solutions that nicely address the need for additional space, while keeping a tight budget in mind. Dividers can also differentiate space when configured in a linear wall application, potentially adding multifunctional elements to the wall, including tack or markerboards, glass panels for light throughput, and planters and signage to finish the space.

SUSPENDED & sound-absorbing

Adaptiveness is the key for success in modern workspace design. Space division elements can be incorporated into open plan environments to meet both immediate and long-term space needs. Ceiling-installed dividers, in particular, can easily be re-positioned and suspended to shape any space for frequently changing use scenarios. They also account for other needs within an environment, like overhead lighting or visual and acoustical features.

clearly DEFINED

In open plan spaces, keep safety precautions intact using some simple space division solutions that deliver.

One key consideration in rethinking the office is creating spaces within open plan environments that employees are comfortable returning to. Continue to serve the original intent of increased collaboration and knowledge sharing, while clearly communicating physical distancing, circulation patterns, and spatial context in a way that ensures people using the space can be and feel safe.
